The hardest columns that I had to work on during this assignment were the job descriptions, job title, department, and address columns. This was due to how job descriptions, job title, and department were all very interconnected with each cleaning. When I made a mistake in one, it would pop out in the other. It was also just very difficult to clean the addresses because of so many things that needed to be accounted for when cleaning them. Some trade-offs that were made were probably some code that was longer than needed and maybe some code efficiency with some of the more difficult tasks or columns. Finally, what remains imperfect in the cleaned data is some duplicates, and that's because they have identical names even though they are definitely different people due to different Social Security numbers and employee id’s.